

FORBES.COM

NBA All-Star Rolando Blackman Joins Executive Management Team at All American Research and Drug Testing

09.26.05, 8:46 AM ET

Dallas Mavericks' Assistant Coach Furthers Mission of Education and Drug Abuse Prevention in Sports IRVING, Texas, Sept. 26 /PRNewswire/ -- All American Research and Drug Testing announced today that well-renowned professional basketball veteran Rolando Blackman will join the company's executive management team in a dual role of partner and corporate spokesperson.

Blackman, former NCAA All-American, U.S. Olympian, NBA All-Star and current assistant coach for the Dallas Mavericks, will take an active role with the company. Blackman joins All American Research and Drug Testing's president and CEO Louis W. Cunningham in a collective mission to develop industry-leading testing, education and awareness programs.

All American Research and Drug Testing is Drug & Alcohol Testing Industry Association (DATIA) accredited and provides nationwide onsite services including five-panel drug screening, high school extracurricular drug testing, background checks, grant writing, paternity testing, drug-free workplace programs and breath alcohol testing. Customized programs for the Department of Transportation and non-regulated companies are also available.

"We are very pleased with Mr. Blackman's acceptance and enthusiasm for his new role. His insight and experience will allow All American Research and Drug Testing to be the catalyst for change in high school and collegiate athletics," said Cunningham.

"I am excited about my new role. It is a wonderful way for me to give back to the industry and help shape the future of young athletes," said Blackman. "Given the current state of affairs, our young people need a strong and positive drug-free message from someone who has walked the talk."

The 2004 National Survey on Drug Use and Health reported there were approximately 8.1 million persons needing treatment for an illicit drug use problem in 2004, an increase over those needing treatment in 2003. Additionally, 6.6 million people needed but did not receive treatment for an illicit drug use problem in 2004. "We have programs and services to test, educate, empower and assist individuals, educators and corporations," added Cunningham. "Our goal is to offer a long term solution to this epidemic and provide preventative intervention. The addition of Rolando Blackman is an important step to making that goal a reality."

About All American Research and Drug Testing

All American Research and Drug Testing, <http://www.allamericanresearch.com>, is the catalyst for change in corporate America and athletics. Programs are designed to empower individuals, educators and corporations. The company is headquartered in Irving, Texas with nationwide screenings, onsite services and customized programs. All American Research and Drug Testing is DATIA accredited and proud to be a minority owned corporation.

NOTE TO EDITORS: A photo of Rolando Blackman is available upon request.